For Immediate Release: September 22, 2016
For More Information: Acting Police Chief, Andy Ellington, 434-392-9259

FPD Announces 'See Something, Send Something' Phone App

With the U.S. Vice Presidential Debate coming to Longwood University and our community on October 4, this is truly an exciting time. In anticipation of the event, The Farmville Police Department, in conjunction with Virginia State Police, is encouraging residents to download a free phone app to report suspicious activity.

The debate is a unique opportunity and will place Farmville in the national and international spotlight. While most people's daily activities should not be affected in any significant way, citizens can expect to see an increase in visitors and traffic. The Farmville Police Department is diligently working with multiple local, state, and federal partners to keep our community safe and secure during this event.

"We want to remind our residents that they are empowered to protect their families, neighbors, and community by recognizing and reporting suspicious activity," says Acting Police Chief Andy Ellington.

Anyone can download the free app by searching "See Send" on their phone via their app store. Once the app is downloaded, users can report anything suspicious via text or by sending an image. Residents can also call the Farmville Emergency Communications Center at 434-392-3332.

For ongoing debate information and a link to the app, visit www.farmvilleva.com/debate.

###